HELMETS: THE PROS AND CONS

By JIM KEARNEY
THE VANCOUVER SUN

Quite possibly the definitive word on hockey helmets was uttered recently by the Canucks' newest centre and all-Canadian flake, Cleland (Keke) Mortson. He's been wearing one for the past few seasons and he says of his decision to cover his head:

"It suddenly occured to me that all these football players wear helmets. Also that they've all got college educations. I figured there had to be a message there somewhere. So that's why I wear a helmet."

For a guy who has carefully cultivated his reputation as an oddball, Mortson makes uncommon sense.

Boston Bruins' Ted Green is the latest example of the importance of protecting one's skull. Cuts, torn ligaments and broken fingers, arms or legs invariably can be repaired and the player returned to action as good as new.

But a broken skull is something else. It can mean brain damage and/or permanent disability and even death. Very few players who suffer serious head injuries are ever able to come back.

"We hockey people are a funny breed of cat," San Diego coach and general manager Max McNab recently told this writer. "We wear equipment that protects our shins, our Achilles tendons, our thighs and our elbows and shoulders.

"But when it comes to protecting the most important part of our bodies — the head — we can find any number or reasons why we can't wear a helmet."

You've probably heard most of them. Players complain that they sweat too much under their helmets. They sweat under their shoulder pads, too, but they don't complain about that. They claim that helmets weigh too much, interfere with their vision and tend to take away from their identity.

Also, there seems to be an unspoken code of honor that suggests helmets aren't quite manly. Many players are afraid that their courage might be questioned if they adopt headwear.

However, that's an outlook that's fading as the wearing of helmets gradually increases. With more pro players coming out of college hockey, where helmets are mandatory, and with headgear now the rule in amateur hockey right up through junior, the increase is only natural.

The players now coming into pro are used to helmets. They don't feel strange or uncomfortable. Many young players do discard them when they turn pro so as to be in step with the majority. But many also keep them.

There was a considerable and sudden movement towards helmets two years ago, when Minnesota North

Stars' Bill Masterton died after striking his head on the ice. Established stars like Stan Mikita, Doug Mohns and Pierre Pilote, among others, suddenly adopted headgear.

While this was the first actual death from head injuries in pro hockey in more than 50 years, the Masterton tragedy sparked considerable research into the matter. From the files of amateur hockey at all levels from tads to commercial league and just plain pickup-type teams, more than a dozen head injury fatalities were produced.

The reason for the pros' better record is obvious. They are pros because they are better athletes, more adept on their skates and not so susceptible to falling down or plunging into the boards through sheer awkwardness.

However, their skulls are no thicker than anyone else's and no one has yet perfected head transplants. Mikita mentioned this when he joined the helmet brigade. And nobody is more aware of it than Green, who says if and when he plays again it will be in a helmet.

The NHL's leading tough guy is now a leading advocate of helmets on the only grounds that the use or non-use of them can be properly argued — common sense. As long as the chance of head injury remains an inherent part of the game, helmets make a lot of sense. Or, as Mortson, who had the first word in this piece, says in the last word :

"When those air force pilots go up in their planes, they wear parachutes, eh? They don't figure they're going to crash, but in case they do they want to come out of it alive. Okay, it's the same in hockey. That's why I wear a helmet."

THE VANCOUVER SUN

CUFF NOTES: Funny how time can change things . . . Remember back at the start of the season when the Canucks were the hottest road show in the Western Hockey League, but couldn't seem to win at home? . . . In case you hadn't noticed, the Canucks now have a six-game winning streak going for them at home . . . They've taken two from Salt Lake City, two from San Diego and two from Denver . . . And remember when they were having trouble buying a goal despite the highest shots on goal total in the league? . . . Try convincing Rudy Pilous of that . . . The Denver Spurs coach and general manager has watched the Canucks pump 21 goals past his club in their last three meetings . . . "Coaching has to be a lot easier when you've got an Andy Bathgate on your club," Rudy sighs . . . No one is in a better position to appreciate the value of a super star . . . Rudy had two of the biggest in the game, Bobby Hull and Stan Mikita, when he coached the Chicago Black Hawks . . . But turning back to the Canucks he adds, "a few guys like Marc Reaume, Duke Harris, Bob Lemieux and Ted Taylor don't hurt, either" . . . But in case someone got the idea he was starting a Vancouver fan club, Pilous couldn't resist a few barbs on his last visit . . . "There's a place for strategy in this game all right," he concedes, "but I've never been able to figure out what stalling at the start of a period does for you" . . . Then, with a look down the hall to Joe Crozier's office, he added, "I don't care if you wait half an hour, if the other guy has got a team better than yours, you're going to get your clock cleaned a few times. Joe may find that out next year" . . . Rudy was still burning about Crozier's stalling tactics that last time the Canucks played in Denver . . . "We're having trouble drawing crowds," he admitted, "and all that stuff does is hurt your spectacle" . . . Crozier only smiles and says, "no comment" . . . Phil Maloney, one of the Canucks' all time greats, is giving his new scouting job all the enthusiasm he had as a player . . . Phil has spent a lot of time scouting junior teams on the prairies . . . "There's a kid in Flin Flon and one in Estevan that I think are good enough to play in the Western League right now," he says . . . With Vancouver's impending entry into the National Hockey League, good scouting reports are vital for it is through the junior draft that Vancouver will gradually build up to the strength of its new rivals.

PRESS BOX CHATTER

. . . Western Hockey League followers have been watching with keen interest the exploits of one Harold Laycoe, formerly of the Portland Buckaroos and now with the floundering Los Angeles Kings. Following are a few observations from Prince Hal as told to a Minneapolis columnist:

"Regarding our disappointing attendance," Laycoe began, "we've been caught in the war for the entertainment dollar. When you have successful football teams like USC, UCLA and the LA Rams and basketball by the Lakers, it becomes a problem.

"People in Los Angeles are used to stars, to leading men. They are used to the best in entertainment. Hockey, to be an immediate success, would have had to do what baseball and basketball did — move in an established team. The Brooklyn Dodgers and Minneapolis Lakers are examples.

"If an old-line club like Montreal had shifted and an expansion team had moved into Montreal, you wouldn't be able to buy a ticket in Los Angeles.

"Hockey has to excite people. If, for example, we had Bobby Orr, I'm sure we'd sell out every game."

Asked if he'd ever considered trying to trade for an Orr, Laycoe continued: "Not when you consider the players who would have to be given up for Orr. I want to win a few games, not just fill the rink."

To date, Laycoe has been having trouble on both counts.

"But," he adds, optimistically, "the product sells itself; it takes a little time."

Salutes the Vancouver Canucks star of the month...

BRAD SELWOOD

Promising rookie Brad Selwood has blossomed into one of the big favorites at the Pacific Coliseum this season. The youngster from Leamington, Ont., came to the Canucks from the Toronto Maple Leafs' chain in a three-player trade and has been outstanding for Vancouver on defence. We're proud to salute young Brad as the Canucks star of the month!

Money Well Spent

By CLANCY LORANGER, The Vancouver Province

CLANCY LORANGER

In his capacity as general manager of the Canucks, Joe Crozier has made five important purchases in the two seasons he's been here.

Rival Western Hockey League managers no doubt will be quick to point out that Crozier has had an edge on some of his rivals: he hasn't had to worry about the budget too much.

But let's not forget that Crozier has shown a lot of savvy in the choice of personnel he's brought in. He obviously knows a hockey player when he sees one, and the money he's spent hasn't been wasted.

Last year, when Crozier was looking for more muscle for his team, he heard that Ted McCaskill was available.

The 33-year-old forward had spent most of his hockey career playing with Nashville in the Eastern League, although he had played four games for Minnesota's expansion National Hockey League club.

McCaskill's only other professional experience had been in the Central League, but Crozier knew that Ted was tough, and he was willing to gamble the $1,500 waiver price Minnesota was asking. Later, after the Canucks had won the Lester Patrick Cup, Joe was to call that the "best $1,500 I spent all year."

McCaskill had only 24 points during the regular season, but he contributed six assists in four semi-final playoff games, and more than earned his keep by intimidating the opposition.

McCaskill joined the Canucks on Dec. 1. It wasn't until March 3 that Pat Hannigan became a Canuck, bought from Philadelphia for considerably more than $1,500.

But he was worth the money, too, especially in the playoffs, when he scored four big goals before being sidelined for the last two games with a twisted knee.

This year — so far — Crozier has made two important buys in centres Keke Mortson and Gerry Goyer who, with Andy Bathgate and Germain Gagnon, give Vancouver considerable strength down the middle. Mortson wasn't playing at Baltimore, and Portland had given up on Goyer — but both have found new life here.

The fifth purchase? Howie Young, the colorful defenceman-forward. Howie didn't stay long, and is now playing centre at Rochester, but Crozier has said that Young figures strongly in his plans for next year, when the Canucks enter the NHL.

Few Big Names Still Available In '70 Draft

By HAL SIGURDSON

THE VANCOUVER SUN

The National Hockey League's expansion formula to stock the two new teams which will join the lodge in 1970-71 has already been poked, probed and prodded.

In Vancouver and Buffalo, the cities that will in all probability be accepted into the NHL, the plan is viewed with all the enthusiasm you might engender for something you just found in your soup. And hadn't ordered.

In case you came in late, each of the 12 existing teams can protect 17 players, including two goaltenders. Each time a team loses a player, it can add another to its protected list. First year pros and players 22 years of age or younger are exempt from the draft. No team can lose more than three players.

Got the picture? This won't be any charitable venture, particularly in view of the fact the new cities will be coughing up $6 million apiece. But the thing is this. Barring an unexpected change of heart, Vancouver and Buffalo are going to have to live with it.

So what does it mean? In terms of talent, that is.

Well, if every team in the NHL was stocked with as much talent as the Montreal Canadiens, it wouldn't be too bad.

Canadiens have so many good players that even an old sleight of hand expert like general manager Sammy Pollock is going to have trouble making people like Dick Duff, Gilles Tremblay, Peter Mahovlich, Claude Provost and Ted Harris disappear from the available list.

After that the picking gets considerably slimmer, but there are a few interesting possibilities among the probable leftovers, though most of the good ones are getting a bit long in the tooth.

Just for the sake of argument, here are a few players who could be available to Vancouver and Buffalo next June.

From New York: Don Marshall, Ron Stewart, Don Simmons, Terry Sawchuck. (Names, but the youngest will be 38).

From Minnesota: Darryl Sly (remember him?), Moose Vasko and after that it doesn't really matter.

From Detroit: Matt Ravlich, Ron Harris and Jim Watson. (Once you get by the first stringers, the Wings are the thinnest in talent in the old division).

From Chicago: Either Denis Dejordy or Dave Dryden, Howie Menard and perhaps Lou Angotti or even Doug Mohns.

From Boston: Ron Murphy and possibly Wayne Cashman. (Bruins have lots of talent, but nine youngsters, including Bobby Orr, are not eligible for the draft).

From Oakland: Charlie Hodge, Harry Howell and Bob Lemieux. (If Vancouver drafted Bob he wouldn't even have to pack since he's already here).

From Philadelphia: (Optimistically) Reg Fleming, Bill Sutherland and Dick Cherry.

From Pittsburgh: Andy Bathgate, Dean Prentice and pick a name. Any name.

From Los Angeles: Gord Labossiere, Brent Hughes and one of their promising young goaltenders, probably Claude Hardy.

From Toronto: Mike Pelyk, Jim McKenny and Chris Evans are three of the better ones who could be available. George Armstrong will probably retire again, but the interesting thing will be whether the Leafs protect Tim Horton, who will be 40 before the expansion draft.

From St. Louis: Terry Gray, Wayne Maki and a Plager or two. And will the Blues dare protect both Jacques Plante and Glenn Hall?

The bountiful harvest it ain't, but the list includes a few quality players who may have another year or two left in their aging legs. Then there's always the chance of coming up with a Bobby Orr in draft of juniors.

Add the fact that the Canucks already have strings on roughly 50 players and there's a ray of hope for the forseeable future. Slim perhaps, but at least it's there.

That's a lot of graduates from the Crozier College, and let's look at them team by team.

First, the East Division of the NHL.

Boston—Goalie Gerry Cheevers.

Chicago—Forwards Lou Angotti and Jim Pappin.

Detroit—Forwards Garry Unger, Pete Stemkowski and Larry Jeffrey.

Montreal—None.

New York—Defenceman Arnie Brown.

Toronto—Goalie Bruce Gamble; forwards Mike Walton and Wayne Carleton—since sent out to Phoenix of the Western League; and defenceman Jim Dorey, Jim McKenny, and Pat Quinn.

And in the Western Division:

Minnesota—Forwards Jean-Paul Parise, Bob Barlow and Walt McKechnie; defenceman Darryl Sly.

Philadelphia—Defencemen Larry Hillman and Dick Cherry.

Pittsburgh — Forwards Bryan Hextall, Nick Harbaruk and Wally Boyer; defenceman Duane Rupp, Tracy Pratt and Bob Blackburn.

JIM PAPPIN
. . . RW choice

Los Angeles—Forwards Eddie Shack, Eddie Joyal and Bill Flett—also shifted to the minors since Crozier's assessment.

Oakland—Goalie Charlie Hodge and Gary Smith; forwards Gene Ubriaco and Gerry Ehman.

St. Louis—Defenceman Al Arbour.

That's the list—and naturally the next question was: who are your top six men?

That wasn't as easy for Crozier as it was on the first go-round. But, finally, he narrowed his squad down, and he ended up with this team:

Goal—Cheevers.
Defence—Arbour and Rupp.
Centre—Walton.
Right Wing—Pappin.

As insurance, Crozier tossed in Boyer and Jeffrey as his penalty killers.

His best point men on the power play? He stuck with two of his originals—Pappin on the right side, Walton on the left.

And, to ward off screams from you Shack fans, let it be known that originally Joe couldn't decide between Boyer or Shack for left wing, then scratched both of them in favor of Parise.

That will not, mind you, be the lineup of the Vancouver team next fall. But, if some of those players are left unprotected, at least you have a few hints whom Crozier might choose.
